He comes to a Celony which is suffering keenly from the after effects of mad specuinterior which postesses a large and steadily-Mereasing trade and which has immense possibilities if the burden of taxation is not made too heavy. We will not attempt to lecture His Excellency on local politics. A good deal of legislative work has been got through during the year, and there is no pressing need for more. The Governor, before beginning ective work, will do well to study carefully local affairs and the problems which confront the Colony. There are many ticklish questions, financial and administrative, to be tackled, but they are not insolvable; and if His Excellency does not confine his search for information to bissed official sources, but scoks advices from reliat and impartial will do, satisfactory solutions may be soon obtained and unpflicial members of Council and the community at large maintained.
